Red bricks are bricks that are very old and have been used extensively in the construction of buildings and many structures. They are the main primary materials in construction and they are made from clay. They are different from concrete blocks which are produced by using cement and many fine aggregates. The red bricks are generally orange in colour and are easy to work with. The main difference between red bricks and concrete bricks are as follows: SParametersRed BricksConcrete BricksRaw Materials usedMagnesia, Alumina or Lime Clay, Iron Oxide, and Sand can be obtained locally.Cement, Gravel, Sand, and water. Some people even use fly ash instead of sand.2Strength of the bricksThe compressive strength of the bricks differs from one class or level to another and this usually ranges between 3.5 to 35 N/mm2. The compressive strength of concrete bricks can range from 4 to 5 N/mm2on the basis of the cement grade used for its preparation.3Dry DensityThis parameter also depends on the class of the brick and can range from 1600 - 1920 kg/m3. This unlike red bricks depends on the grade of the cement and can range from 1800 - 2500 kg/m3.4Water AbsorptionThis brick absorbs water and it was found to absorb water 20%less than its actual weightThis on the other hand is lesser compared to red brick where it absorbs water 10% less than its weight.5Thermal ConductivityThermal conductivity is suggested to be around 0.6 to 1 W/mK. The thermal conductivity of this brick varies from 0.7 to 1.28 W/m.K.6Environmental ImpactRed bricks utilize natural clay as the precursor for their products which can be obtained easily. However, this can lead to the depletion of the top fertile soil. They also emit carbon dioxide gas during the manufacturing process. The carbon dioxide emitted during its production is very less.7Water UsageThe curing of the prepared bricks demands more water. The concrete blocks require more water for curing than red bricks as their curing period is around 7 to 14 days. There are different types of Red Bricks. These are categorized into the following categories. A. On the basis of the method of manufacturing and, B. On the basis of the shapeNow on the basis of the manufacturing method, the red bricks are further categorized as follows: i. Unburnt or Sun-dried BricksThese unburnt bricks are generally produced from clay which is naturally dried under the sun after molding. It absorbs the heat from the sun for drying and is not that strong in nature. ii. Burnt Clay BricksThese are other types of bricks that are generally produced from clay that is not dried naturally under the sun bricks are dried by burning inside a kiln of a factory. These are the most widely used red bricks and the burnt clay red bricks are classified into the following-a. First Class Bricks: These prove to be the best red bricks in quality compared to the other classes.b. Second Class Brick: These are second best and they are ground molded and burnt in kilns to dry. They have standard sizes; however, they are irregular and a bit rough in shape and color.c. Third Class Bricks: These red bricks are not burnt fully and hence they have a reddish-yellow color.d. Fourth Class Bricks: These are low-grade quality bricks and they can be crushed easily hence they are mainly used as aggregates in the manufacturing of various constructing materials. Red Bricks SizeThe red bricks are rectangular in shape and have a rough surface. The red bricks are generally available in sizes of 190 x 90 x 40mm and also 190 x 90 x 90mm and there are some which are non-modular sizes of 230 x 110 x 30mm and 230 x 110 x 70 mm. However, the standard sizes that are commercially available for concrete bricks are the ones having lengths of 600, 500, or 400 mm, the height of around 100mm-200 mm, and the width from 50-300 millimeters. However, the dimension of both bricks can differ depending on the different manufacturers. Red Bricks UsageRed bricks are very popular bricks for construction and they are one of the oldest materials for constructing and building structures. They have been used as a structural material for the construction of various structures which include a. Buildings b. Arches c. Foundations.d. Pavement e. Bridges. They have been commonly used for building many structures for aesthetic purposes for good landscaping, architectural designs, facing works, and many others. They are used in making houses, especially in cold areas as they are great insulators and can store heat by absorbing energy in the daytime and releasing the heat at night. This is a great way of keeping the houses warm, especially in winter, compared to other bricks, for any way durable than other bricks, they are hard therefore an withstand extreme weather conditions, and harsh winds and can store heat keeping the house cool in summer and warm in winter. These bricks produce very less waste and can have a very less environmental impact and can be considered eco-friendly and are very useful. The red bricks because of their good compressive strength, are considered good materials for construction and can be used for various types of ordinary construction. The raw material for its production can be easily available and it has a very low maintenance cost. Another good thing about utilizing red bricks is that they are highly resistant to fire and can be recycled and reused easily. For construction related to sound, they have a good sound performance capable of blocking the various noises coming from outside the building.Red Bricks Price When it comes to the Red bricks price, they alone are cheap but the cost of their production and construction is a bit high as the overall cost includes the cost of mortar which demands more capital as mortar demand is also high. In the Indian market, one red brick cost approximately Rs.3 to Rs. 7 and are easily available everywhere at a reasonable and affordable price. The average cost of one brick is generally Rs 5.50, however, this depends on the quantity that one orders. Select Location For Best Experience of Getting Products Display Page 2 Red bricks are primarily crafted from clay, a versatile material molded into shape and then fired in a kiln for hardening. The distinct red color of these bricks arises from the iron content naturally present in the clay. Types of Red Bricks: Red bricks come in various types to cater to different construction needs. These include solid bricks, perforated bricks, and hollow bricks. The selection depends on the specific requirements of the construction project. Applications of Red Bricks: Red bricks find application in a wide range of construction projects, encompassing residential, commercial, and industrial buildings. They serve purposes in both load-bearing and non-load-bearing walls. Durability of Red Bricks: Renowned for their strength, red bricks exhibit remarkable durability. They can endure substantial loads, contributing to the stability and longevity of structures. Thermal Insulation Properties: Clay bricks, including red ones, possess effective thermal insulation properties. They have the ability to absorb and release heat gradually, aiding in the regulation of indoor temperatures. Aesthetic Appeal of Red Bricks: Red bricks are favored for their natural and earthy appearance. Many individuals appreciate the aesthetic charm of exposed brick walls, adding character to architectural designs. Sustainability of Red Bricks: Clay, being a natural and abundant resource, makes red bricks an environmentally friendly choice. However, the production process involves kiln firing, which necessitates energy consumption. Cost of Red Bricks: Red bricks are generally considered cost-effective in comparison to some alternative building materials. However, prices can fluctuate based on factors such as location, production methods, and market demand. Maintenance of Red Bricks: Red bricks are low-maintenance but may require occasional cleaning to eliminate dirt or moss growth. Applying proper sealing can enhance their longevity over time. Local Variations in Red Bricks: The specific characteristics of red bricks can exhibit regional variations based on the clay composition in that particular area. Measuring Compressive Strength in Brick Construction To assess compressive strength, a meticulous process is followed: Take five random brick samples and submerge them in room-temperature water for 24 hours. After 24 hours, remove, drain excess water, and rinse the bricks. Fill their frogs (and any other voids) with regular 1:1 mortar (1 part cement with 1 part sand). Store these bricks beneath wet sacks for 24 hours to allow the setting of mortar. Soak the bricks in water for seven days to facilitate mortar hardening. After drying, independently evaluate the compressive strength of each brick. Apply axial force at a rate of 140 kg/cm2/minute using specialized equipment. Calculate compressive strength using the formula: Co = P/A, where Co is compressive strength, P is load, and A is cross-sectional area. The arithmetic mean of the compressive strength values of all five bricks is considered for classification. Compressive Resistance of Bricks Bricks are classified based on their compressive strength: Grade A brick: 105 kg/cm² Grade B brick: 70 kg/cm² Common building bricks: 35 kg/cm² Sun-dried brick: 15-25 kg/cm² Test for Water Absorption To evaluate water absorption, five complete bricks are submerged in water and weighed individually. The absorption percentage is calculated using the formula: Absorption = (w2 - w1) / w1 x 100, where w1 is the dry weight, and w2 is the weight after 24 hours of immersion. The water absorption of the brick is determined by calculating the mean of five values from five samples. Efflorescence Test Efflorescence, the emergence of white salt deposits, is assessed qualitatively by placing five bricks in distilled water. The severity of efflorescence is categorized as: Serious: Heavy and uniformly distributed salt deposition. Heavy: Over fifty percent coverage by salt deposits. Moderate: Salt deposits cover 10-50 percent surface area. Slight: Less than 10 percent coverage with a very thin, sticky film of salt. Nil: No salt deposition observed even after repeated wetting. Efflorescence in different types of bricks mustn't exceed the prescribed level. Dimensions Tolerance Test This test ensures that bricks meet the required dimensions: Select twenty random bricks and remove any loose clay particles. Arrange the bricks on a smooth, level surface according to their measured dimensions. Measure the overall length of the brick rows, ensuring they fall within specified limits for various brick types.
